

Positive Traits:

Positive Thinking: You possess firmness of conviction. You affirm your views with clarity and conviction, readily taking a stand on issues and principles. Once you make up your mind, it's for keeps. Loyal to your choices, you will not compromise your principles and are hard to sway from your path. You will stand up for your ideas, whether right or wrong. Once you set your mind on what's right, you won't be shaken from it. Since your conclusions are the result of conscious decisions, they are important to you. Whether a decision is made from feeling or a realistic assessment of facts, your conviction will be held firmly.

Broadmindedness: You are tolerant of other people's opinions and beliefs. You're more easy-going in style, apt to ignore slight departures from accepted social norms or conventional behavior. You compromise more easily because of your ability to envisage the advantages of different viewpoints. With a broader outlook on life, you appreciate the good points in the ideas of other people. Able to handle progressive concepts without feeling threatened, you consider them willingly, either accepting them or rejecting them according to their usefulness. Always willing to look at something in a new way, you encourage others to express their views. Even when you think that you are right, you are willing to listen to the opinions of others and adopt their suggestions if they seem valid to you.

Fluidity of thinking: Expressing yourself effortlessly and with ease, you smoothly change from one phase of thought to another. You have the ability to communicate easily, either in writing or through the spoken word. You particularly have a feel for the right phrase or verbal expression. You can debate on just about any issue. Able to change a subject cleverly, you direct the conversation adroitly away from uncomfortable topics. You can run around an argument in circles, mix other people up, turn them around, then win them over to your side before they realize what has happened. Because you can communicate your ideas convincingly, you are more able to influence others to accept your point of view.

Negative Traits:

Sluggishness & Mediocrity: Though you have the required skills, they are a bit mediocre in your performance. It might be due to management as well because they haven't put any pressure on you, so you are taking advantage of the situation and taking it for granted. You just do your day-to-day activities, but you don't take anything seriously because you think it's not your responsibility. You just do your duty, that's it. The job done by you would be the bare minimum work, something which doesn't need to be praised for doing.

Confusion: You have a disorderly mind. You live an unscheduled life and fail to distinguish between important and unimportant ideas and things. Unable to organize yourself, you have little self-directive ability or control. With a short attention span, concentrating on one activity for longer periods of time is difficult for you. Although you may plan a job before you begin, you tend to do completely different things when the time comes to carry it through. You often work in a hit-and-miss fashion that makes it necessary to do a job twice to get it done right. Much time is wasted in this manner.

Planning poorly, you scatter your interests into too many directions at once and try to crowd too many projects into your working day. As a result, deadlines are frequently missed.

Inattention to details: Working with details is not your strong point. While you may be good at seeing the overall picture, having to deal with minutiae irritates you. If you have any say in the matter, someone else will do the detail work. You probably know that someone else can handle details better than you and with more accuracy and ease. You usually work with the end goal in mind and without special concern for the details of reaching it. Your concern is with the big idea, rather than the individual parts. Achieving the final result means more than the steps along the way. Since you do not speak the same language as detail-minded people, it may be difficult for you to deal with individuals who are obsessed with trivia.